On account of having to quarry all the stone used in the bed of the road, and of increased expense for hauling, this part of the road cost more than the mile and a quarter built last year. The total expense was about seven hundred and fifty dollars. This road has stood the trial of a year s rains and travel, and as yet shows no signs of needing repairs. It is a good example of road building in the mountains and proves that it is not necessary for supervisors to pay $2,500 per mile for making good roads. As stated above, the grade up the mountain on this road is excessive and several routes have been surveyed roughly to determine where an easy grade to the top of the mountain can be cut. The best route is to follow Brandon s Hollow to the White Rock Road and then turn to the right on the flat and meet the main road at the Monahan field. Such a road is a necessity, so in connection with the improvement cutting made at the foot of Pine Mountain, the new road was begun and extended a third of a mile to the end of the improvement work. There was no road by which the wood could be removed without considerable sledding and the new road simplified the matter; but the ultimate aim is to push this road up the mountain as soon as possible....
