Excerpt: . . . administration of the local anesthetic is out of proportion in point of time to the operation it self. But this is not a valid objection against it. Local anesthesia will not overcome spasm of the abdominal muscles, nor can local anesthesia be administered in mutilating, violent injuries where rapid surgical measures of an emergency character are indicated. In the latter instance it was always understood that, no matter how much the patient was in collapse from the shock of the injury, the general anesthetic had a therapeutic effect in relieving the shock, in the same way that the methods of anociassociation would anticipate it in surgical operations. However, the added shock to the patient of the remedial surgery would tend to overcome any benefit that the general anesthetic would bring about; but in such cases there is no alternative but to give the general anesthetic and operate, regardless of the question of the anesthetic or theperative shock. Whatever the indication, however, children and BHEUMATISM (Concluded). Dr. Hugh T. Patrick, Chicago, Ill. , contributes to the Journal of the American Medical Association a most interesting discussion of rheumatic headache. Rheumatic or indurative headache may be acute, but most cases are subacute or chronic---a matter of many weeks or months, not rarely of years. With Auerbach I agree that the majority of the patients are vomen, but the preponderance is not great--about four to three. The disease seems to be rare in persons under 20 years...
