Excerpt: . . . 55. Bend Standing Starting Position is taken on the command: Arms--bend! The arms are bent quickly upwards, so that the hands, with the fingers slightly bent and the knuckles outwards come up towards the shoulders; the tips of the fingers turned towards the outer sides of the upper arms, which are kept in a vertical position with the elbows as close to the body as possible; the shoulders drawn well back and down (fig. 13). The exercise for taking this position is called: Standing Arms bending upwards. Standing position is returned to on the command: Arms downwards--stretch! The arms are stretched quickly to the sides; the elbows and shoulders are kept perfectly still. Note. --When first practising this position it is taken slowly. Common faults: The shoulders raised and carried forward. During the movement of the arms, the shoulders not kept in a fixed...

This book is definitely not simple to begin on studying but quite fun to see. I actually have read and that i am sure that i will gonna read through yet again once again in the foreseeable future. It is extremely difficult to leave it before concluding, once you begin to read the book.
